Art & Design Librarian

Nathan is the art and design librarian for a large university. He does not consider himself a scholar but feels fulfilled by helping academics, specifically in his background of art history. He is responsible for facilitating research classes for students, advising students one-on-one with research strategies, and building the library's collection through books, journals, and databases. As a result, he has to constantly evaluate the utility and credibility of academic materials and relies heavily on the authoritative voice of academic brands.

“ If you want basic, correct information you want to go to the museum's website. ”

He Needs:

- A clear understanding of what is a scholarly digital publication.
- A clear understanding about how to cite a digital publication.
- A clear understanding about when students can and cannot use images.
- Ability to discover and share resources about works of art unfamiliar to him.
- More user-friendly interfaces of scholarly databases for his students to use.
